"thought for the day" blog bringing in new ways for hundreds of readers to apply nonviolence in their daily lives. Interviews, radio programs and podcasts are either conducted in person or shared by electronic means, and archived on our educational website, www.mettacenter.org. The website sees about 8,000 visitors per month with close to 13,000 page views. We also have a lively network in Twitter and Facebook. We have publications and an ongoing outreach for a book that was published at the end of last year with BK Press, including creating it in the form of an audiobook in 2014. The vast majority of our programming is centered around this fundamental need to create materials that people can use, share and learn from. These materials are directed toward a higher image of human potential, with an emphasis on positivity, practicality and empowerment

Form 990-EZ, Part III, Line 29 - Statement of Program Service Accomplishments.

Educational Praxis

We worked to build a strong practical understanding of the constructive aspects of nonviolence through several projects: the Shanti Sena Network, the Roadmap, and citizen media/journalist outreach. We offered six trainings in 2014 in the skills of nonviolent conflict intervention and nonviolence theory. Roadmap is an ambitious project and conceptual model created to help cohere the thousands of projects, various activisms and passions for social change into one model, moving from personal empowerment to constructive program to resistance where necessary. We also offer consulting for nonviolent activists, and we developed new contacts for nonviolence media creation and training. We also began the research for a summer internship on Gandhi for a pilot group of high school students, to take place in the summer of 2015.

Research Fellowships, Internships and Volunteerism

Young adults, 20-35, are invited to apply for stipend funded research fellowships with the Metta Center in order to delve deep into an area for social change that would benefit from strategic research. We had one yearlong research intern, who studied the history of nonviolence movements worldwide. The Executive Director spent the year researching nonviolence in early childhood Montessori education. And a group of five volunteers spearheaded research into the science behind nonviolence.
